

BRADFORD CHA RAMBLING AND SOCIAL CLUB

Newsheet September 2022

The traditional 'October' newsletter is coming out as the September news-sheet this time, to try catch people with the all-important booking forms before the oncoming Spanish holiday. Buen viaje!

The forms in question are for the Sunday Christmas Dinner Ramble, this year's Thursday evening Saturday Christmas Dinner (no ramble), and the Windermere longer-than-usual March weekend (we'll be coming back on the Monday).

The new syllabus and Sunday booking slips are also included, as Gill explains in her report. Captain Hindsight says it's probably a good idea to save it onto your computer or phone, otherwise you can, print it, right now. However, if you are digitally happy it will always be on our new website.

Treasurer Ronnie has explained the policy behind the new pricing in his piece.

So read on, and keep walking!

(Compiled by Jackie Wilkes)

Jean Galthen, the General Secretary, starts us off with a resume of what's been going on:

From the General Secretary

I hope you have all enjoyed the very warm Summer and are looking forward to the excellent schedule of both Saturday and Sunday walks for the Autumn which is included with this newsletter. Our club is dependent on you joining our walks as well, as too are our walk leaders, and your continued support is very much appreciated. We have had some discussions around increasing the number of Sunday coach trips; this is reliant on maintaining a stable number of members on the coach and being able to have walk leaders available, both of which been challenging of late. If you are interested in leading walks, whatever the level, then please have a word with any member of the committee. We would be happy to mentor any possible walk leaders if they feel they would need some guidance and/or reassurance.

The club will be celebrating its 120th anniversary in 2023 and we are looking to commemorate this by producing some CHA hats and buffs which will be for sale. This is something certainly worth celebrating and I hope you will support us for many years to come!

Just a polite reminder for people using the bathroom company car park in Bradford on Sundays. I've spoken to the owner and he is quite happy for us to use the car park on Sundays but only on that day. Please don't use the car park on any other day, otherwise he may withdraw his goodwill and we would have to find alternative parking arrangements.

Can't believe it's that time of year but look out for the Christmas Dinner booking forms which are included in the newsletter, they are always popular.

Our new website is almost ready to go live and we will let you know as soon as it is up and running.

Many thanks for your continued support.

Best wishes

Jean Galthen, General Secretary

So, talking of the new website, here's the latest news from Ray:

Our New Website

One of the purposes of our new website will be to attract new members in coordination with our Meet-up group as well as other social media and press releases.

Meetup has proved to be our best recruitment method and we hope the website will complement it.

Our website has our club programme and a lot of information about our club as well as photographs.

Most members will know how to use websites on their computer or phone but here is some help for those who are not so sure.

The website has a menu on at the top of each page. On your computer, clicking each heading shown in yellow in this article gives a dropdown sub-menu as shown below, which you can click to view. They are not clickable in this article. We hope these headings are self-evident. Please have a look on the site when it goes live. We will tell you on WhatsApp and Facebook when it is ready.

On your phone you can get to the menu by clicking the 'Square Menu icon' shown here.

Walkers everywhere will easily find our website if they Google 'Bradford' and 'walk' or 'walking'. They will also find links from other sites such as the ones listed on our links page.

They will find everything they need to know about our club and we hope they like what they see and that some will join us.

Members will easily find committee contacts, details of our walks, and useful links to buses and trains.

There is a Google map on our site and by going to full screen you will see a list of our pick-up points to the left. There are tick boxes to the left which will show the pick-up points.

It will be very easy to book a coach place from your phone or computer, especially if you pay by PayPal.

A new webmaster?

Once the website is live it will need updating from time to time. We will need to update the club programme, currently quarterly, and update our newsletter, change our committee member details and various other tasks.

The website uses WordPress and our Website builder is providing us with tutorials on how to do this. It is alleged to be not very difficult to edit the website. There are also a lot of tutorials on the internet. However, I am a long in the tooth septuagenarian and it would be good if a younger person would volunteer.

I have bought a book called WordPress in Easy Steps which I would give to anyone who took on the job.

Ronnie's financial thoughts and committee decisions are here:

Coach Fares

Due to the high numbers that booked on the coach from Jan to March 2022 the CHA ended up having a surplus of £1320 on the coach for the financial year ended 31st March 2022.

Your committee did not want to generate profits of that magnitude so we based the fares for this current year on the level of passengers we had been achieving knowing if we did make an overall loss we had the surplus generated in the previous year to fall back on.

Initially the fare charged was £13.00 and ran until the 3rd July Nine journeys were undertaken in that period and these made a loss of £109.00. The average of passengers booked on the coach was 43.4

The next programme had quite a few that were long journeys and the fares for these trips should have been in the region of £15.00. Your committee still wanted these trips to be at a reasonable price for our members so we stuck to a fare of £14.00 knowing that if a loss was made we could fall back on the previous year's surplus.

Up to 04/09/22, including the Saturday trip, there have been some long trips and the seven trips have generated a loss of £331.

A loss of over £470.00 has been generated in the first five months of this year and if they continued at these levels we would have to consider raising the fares, as such a level of loss would be unsustainable in the long run.

It has been mentioned that the numbers on the coach may have dropped due to the frequency of the walks so people are picking and choosing, holidays and the length of the journeys and the six o'clock finish.

The length of the journey does not seem to be an issue as the three longest journeys to Sedbergh, Goathland and Hawkshead have had the highest numbers on the coach. The average for the five trips has been 44 so our passenger numbers are holding up. The lowest number of 32 was for the shortest trip to Buckden. We were able to mitigate the loss for that trip by switching the booking to one of JAK's smaller coaches.

There still are trips to Derbyshire but the others are to the Dales. For those who do not like long journeys these should suit them.

As regards the earlier finish this would stop any longer journeys and would be detrimental to the walking club as the choice of walk venues would be more limited. However once the clock goes back this will be the case.

Please continue to support your coach so that a low fare can be offered for the trips.

Ronnie Wade

Jayne's club weekend plans are here; the booking form is at the end.

Weekends Report from Jayne Noble

Chollerford Weekend, October 14th-16th 2022

Thank you to everyone who has booked on this weekend. 43 members have now booked and paid in full. If there are any men still interested in going there is one place available in a twin room. Ray has kindly offered to put together some walks and will have probably contacted a few people about leading walks already. It is a lovely area and I'm sure we will all enjoy some great walks. If you haven't already done so please make sure you have let me know where you are getting on the coach.

I'm looking forward to seeing some of you on the weekend.

March 2023

I have now booked the Windermere Hotel in Cumbria for 3 nights, Friday to Monday March 10th to 13th

A booking form is included in this newsletter. This long weekend is great value and I'm sure it will be very popular, so get the booking form or hand written letter requesting a place in early please.

Jayne Noble

HOLIDAY CO ORDINATOR'S REPORT-AN IMPORTANT REMINDER FROM RITA:

The first payment of £147 for next year's holiday to Fort William is due by the 30th of September.

The holiday is now full and 25 people have booked to go on the Jacobite Railway trip to Mallaig. If you haven't already booked this but would like to go on it, please get in touch with me as soon as possible and I will try to alter the booking.

Rita

John Feather has sent us this- please make sure you see the booking form for the 1st December Christmas Dinner as things are a little different this year.

Saturday Secretary's Report

Thanks to all leaders and supporters of the Saturday walks. It has been a fairly uneventful baptism for me. Mostly gone to plan. Slight hiccup due to do to transport strikes but walks went ahead due to the resilience of leaders and members. I enjoyed organising the trip to Morecambe and I hope to organise something similar next year, maybe Grange-over-Sands. We are now into the second syllabus of my term in office and will soon be looking for leaders in my third term. So in anticipation of your support, thank you. Christmas dinner details are in this edition of the newsletter and I hope to see many of you there.

John.

STOP PRESS: there is now a volunteer for 3rd December's Saturday walk-(see syllabus), details TBA later.

And from Gill Darnbrook, Sunday Rambles Secretary:

Hi Everybody

I hope you have all had a good summer and managed to get away this year after two years of restrictions.

We have to continue with our short, three month syllabuses for the time being and the October to January syllabus is out now. We continue to have on average two Sunday coaches per month – there are six in the syllabus. There are two weekends where the club will be away on holidays and also Christmas Day and New Year's Day both fall on Sundays so our coaches have to avoid all these dates.

However we have some good trips lined up so please support your club and come on the coach.

As you look at the leaders you may notice a few new names – thank you to these brave souls for volunteering and of course many thanks to all our regular leaders as well! Seriously though, it's not that difficult to lead, we all make mistakes and get lost sometimes so if you're thinking 'perhaps I could lead a walk' please come forward and ask about it, we will give you lots of help and advice. If you haven't thought about leading now is a good time to do so – we are desperately short of leaders and returning to weekly coaches will not be an option unless there are people to lead the walks.

The Sunday coach on December 11th is the Sunday Christmas Dinner trip. There is the usual choice of A, B and C walks followed by dinner at the Golden Lion at Settle.

NB This event MUST be pre-booked and paid for using the booking form in the newsletter. For further information regarding the dinner please contact Linda Richardson (contact number is at the beginning of the syllabus).

Bookings for Sunday coaches should be sent to Sally Tetlow (or to Ron Wade if Sally is unavailable). Contact details are either in the syllabus or newsletter. Booking slips are provided at the end of this syllabus. Please read them carefully as there are different prices for some trips.

Looking forward to seeing you soon

Gill

From Linda Richardson, Social Secretary:

Hi everyone, we are still experiencing good weather for walking and holidays.

Socials we have enjoyed.

Wednesday 3rd August 2022. The Boathouse, Saltaire.

It was a popular venue with 31 people taking part. Malcolm led us on a very interesting walk round Saltaire village. We returned to the Boathouse where the food was served promptly. I hope everyone enjoyed the evening and thanks to Malcolm for leading and all the information on the village.

Wednesday 7th September 2022. Wetherspoons, Bingley.

We met on a mild summer evening. There was a light drizzle as we walked through the park and along the river. Frank told us about Bingley and its interesting buildings. Twenty-six people sat down for the meal. I think everyone enjoyed the evening and thanks to Frank for leading.

Thanks to everyone who has come along and made socials a success, and I hope you continue to support them in the future.

Best wishes Linda.

Socials to look forward to are to be found in this syllabus: 12th October and 2nd November.

Linda is also taking the bookings for the Sunday Christmas Dinner Ramble to Settle on 11th December.

Malcolm is looking at the wider implications of 'outdoor politics':

President's Address from Malcolm Walters

I came across this group of people who are asking that the right to roam is extended. They were it seems very peaceful. This took place this summer

Campaigners visit Berkshire estate belonging to Richard Benyon, Minister in charge of Access to Nature

The Right to Roam group had previously met Benyon to discuss their ideas to open up at least publicly- funded woodlands and the green belt to walkers.

It's hard to know what Access to Nature Minister Richard Benyon normally finds in his gigantic Berkshire estate when he strolls out on a Sunday afternoon. It is unlikely, however, to be a loudly singing group of activist trespassers, dressed up as psychedelic animals and accompanied by an all-female Morris-dancing troupe.

But that's what wandered up his drive on Sunday, when protesters visited the Englefield estate, calling on Benyon to open it up to the public and extend access for everyone.

When asked why they chose this particular estate, a spokesperson said: "Well, he's the Access to Nature minister! So it seems totally appropriate to come and experience the freedom and the land that he has."

As minister in charge of Access to Nature, Benyon was involved in the recent Agnew review, which looked at broadening access to the countryside, but which was shelved. Just 8% of England's land has free access, including coastal paths and moorlands, and campaigners want this to change.

The 12,000-acre Englefield estate, which has been in the Benyon family for hundreds of years and is the largest in West Berkshire, contains land that was once a common, before the Enclosures Act meant it could be absorbed into the private estate. It also, according to the Ramblers, contains lost footpaths. This is where the dancers and musicians were heading. Although those assembled were breaking civil law by trespassing, the gamekeepers did not intervene and watched the strange, mystical spectacle from atop a hill.

Nick Hayes, the author of The Book of Trespass who helped organise the event, gave a history of the land: "Looking at 18th-century tithe maps, we can still read the names of the commoners who held rights to farm the land; and looking at archaeological LIDAR data we can still see the commoners' plough lines buried beneath the deer park. The ancestor of our current minister for access to nature, also called Richard Benyon, began the process of enclosing his estate in 1802.

"Over the next 20 years he moved an entire village out of sight of Englefield house to make way for his deer park. Then, in 1854, a stopping order was granted by his friends in parliament to close the public road that ran in front of his house. Today the Ramblers' 'Don't Lose Your Way' website reveals a former footpath running through the estate, identifiable on old Ordnance Survey maps, but which has since been extinguished."

The Right to Roam campaign sent the Conservative peer an open letter, asking him to open up his estate to the public and, in his capacity as access to nature minister, to open up more of the land for people to walk on and have picnics – and perhaps even a little ceilidh.

The campaigners had previously met the minister to discuss their ideas to open up at least publicly funded woodlands and the green belt to walkers. They claim he said their proposals made him feel “warm and fuzzy inside”. In their letter, they tell him they now believe “this was a warm and fuzzy way to tell us we were being ignored”. They added: “Access to nature is something you, as a major landowner, have taken for granted all your life. For the majority of England, however, it is not a luxury but an existential necessity they are denied every day by a system of exclusion; a system that you can change.”

They claimed they did not want to have to trespass on his land but felt “we have to,” adding: “The urgent need for a greater public relationship with nature has been repeatedly stifled and ignored in government.”

The protesters point out that, like many of the decision-makers in parliament, Benyon owns land – so he is perhaps unlikely to act against the interests of large private landowners.

Jon Moses, another Right to Roam campaigner, said: “We’re here today to reconnect with a culture that we lost, a popular culture of the land that was taken away when the aristocracy closed much of England. Over a third of the land in England remains in the hands of the aristocracy, mostly in private estates like this one. And we’re on the land currently of the minister for access for nature, who of course has no public access on much of his land.

“That to us indicates a system that is rigged. We’ve been trying to get ... bills through parliament, we were promised in the Agnew review, a ‘quantum shift in the public’s relationship with nature’. That review has basically been shelved. It’s been thrown out the window, and we suspect the reason why is because landowners like this are the people who hold all the cards.”

Richard Benyon has argued passionately in the past for the importance of green spaces and links, pointing out that green infrastructure creates “stronger ecological networks, gives people better places to live, better health and better quality of life”.

He has also argued for improving access to green space, pointing out that “research shows that people in the most disadvantaged groups in society are the least likely to travel to access the natural environment – so there is even more need to make sure we improve the quality of the environment where they are.

I hope you enjoyed this read.

Malcolm Walters
(with thanks to The Guardian)

Malcolm also tells us ‘Our club is affiliated to the Ramblers Association. They are asking the new Prime Minister to take action’. In a letter to him as our President, they say:

Hello Malcolm

The UK has a new Prime Minister. Liz Truss.

Her government has a lot in its in-tray. But the new Prime Minister must also recognise how vital access to the outdoors is to everyone’s health and wellbeing.

We’ve outlined how Prime Minister Truss can improve access to nature for all. In 2020, just 57% of survey respondents across Great Britain told us they lived within five minutes of green space. This fell to just 39% for people from minority ethnic backgrounds and 46% for those with the lowest income.

Access to the outdoors is vital to everyone’s health and wellbeing. And should be available to everyone, no matter where they live or what their walk of life. That’s why we’re calling on the new government to improve access by taking three key actions:

1. Creating a network of green routes in all towns and cities
2. Putting access to nature at the heart of government legislation
3. Expanding and improving the freedom to roam

Your continued support is crucial to making sure everyone has access to the outdoors. Please share these actions on Twitter or Facebook to make sure they're on the government's agenda.

Kind regards,

James MacColl, Head of Policy, Advocacy and Campaigns

BRADFORD CHA 2122

It promised to be a fine day with clouds gradually dispersing to give hot sunshine, a day to risk leaving your jacket and fleece behind and set off dressed in summer gear. It was a quick start as most had already downloaded the walk and knew the route. One or two had been a bit laggardly, and with concentrated brows were obviously downloading the details as they set off. The pace was fairly easy at first, with plenty of conversation as people positioned and repositioned themselves in the group to catch up on what had happened since the last ramble. There was no real need for this now, as everything apart from the most intimate details were always instantly posted into the club's shared memory. But people still enjoyed face to face communication, and the odd "this just between me and you" details which even in the days before rapid electronic communication quickly, with several embellishments added on in the process, became common knowledge in the club.

Soon the pace increased with the group extending into a line all moving at a steady rhythm. After threading through fields and some woodland there was a pause at the edge of open country. A good view down the valley, made for a possible stop, but several who had already calculated distance against time and found it wanting were fretting to push on and keep to their targets. Some old fashioned types still worked in miles distance, and height in feet. But most had downloaded an algorithm which combined distance, climbing, time, calories burnt, heart rate, and a whole range of other measurements every 30 seconds; giving a final unit total which they religiously downloaded into their own personal slot of the club memory bank, at the end of every ramble.

Now starting to climb and still gradually increasing the pace most started to look happy, apart from one who maintained a thoughtful expression. Something about the recent view tugged on his memory. But the top was getting near, and he settled down. Lunch at the top, and friendly hellos exchanged with young couple, who followed on 10 minutes later. Again he remembered, and this time clearly, climbing this hill one summer day with Carol. They would have been the same age as the young couple, and sat together on that convenient long boulder. Sue was looking at him in an anxious way, and asked if was feeling OK. Some of the others were also looking concerned. He pulled himself together; best not tell Sue, that he remembered this place as a happy time with his first love. He had lost Carol only a few years before rapid advances in technology would have saved her. Hardly any time at all, and she would have been with him now.

Time to move on, and they headed off. He was more or less back to normal, and making a show of being his normal cheerful self; but still couldn't stop himself looking back. With the fine weather they had made good time, and the leader suggested an extension, and also details of the coming club weekend. Everybody started downloading. Some were already booking their place. Sue was again looking anxious, and said we should hurry up and book, before it all fills up. Again, in an effort to seem normal he said hardly knowing why, "Let's give this one a miss and go somewhere on our own". Still floundering, but trying appear normal; he blurted out "We'll do something different, maybe some walking, maybe just go to the coast; have a swim, spend time on the beach, with a bottle of wine. Just enjoy being together, and switch ourselves off from the world."

Sue contrived to look startled, doubtful, and yet happy all at once. He had obviously planned a romantic weekend together but wasn't sure of how to broach the subject, hence his strange behaviour. She gave him a hug and a long kiss, to the sudden surprise of the others. He instantly felt better himself, and the sadness of the past hour started to lift. He was lucky to have met Sue, and while he would never forget Carol, being with Sue was best thing that could have happened to him.

The young couple had watched the group set off, and smiled, "We won't get like them?" she asked. "No way" he replied. "I want you to stay exactly as you are now Carol. I'm sure we'll be able to avoid needing all those implants, and electronic add-ons. Science has moved on; it will be different for us. Look I have bought an old style paper map to follow. They have come back into fashion. Let's sit down on this long boulder, and study it together." They soon forgot the CHA and the map, as they embraced, and then kissed. The hills looked on without comment. They had seen the same, thousands of times over thousands of years. In truth humanity only followed one path, it was the only path with no end, the only one that mattered. Even the CHA couldn't lose it.

But last of all: OBITUARIES

Now, looking back rather than forwards, we fondly remember John Stewart who sadly died this July after more than a decade of decline with dementia, although he was not old. He was the club's first Membership Secretary, not in 1903 but in 1988 when we were getting active enough to need more than just a treasurer to deal with memberships. He learned to use the Cyber mainframe computer at the University to do this, such was his patience and dedication. He led many club walks which were enjoyed at a time when many of us who are still around were in our prime. His sister Pam was also a member and 'Saturday walker', who cared for John until his needs became too great.

In July we heard of the death of Madeline Armitage, who was larger than life in most senses! She joined us about 2017 to get fit for a demanding sponsored expedition to Petra. When this got cancelled shortly before it happened, her response was to organise herself to honour her sponsors by doing the Kirklees Way in a week. Some of us joined her on some of her walks and in 2018 she presented Smile International with over £3,000. Sadly, after an operation in 2019 to do with her weight loss, she never recovered or fulfilled her ambition to continue walking with us and died in July this year.
